In October, he defended his No. 1 national ranking by winning a bout/battle of wills that went on for 33 minutes.

He has two state titles and zero losses in his high school career. So when the junior steps inside the Bergen Catholic wrestling room, it's no surprise many of his teammates look to him as an inspiration and a mentor.

"They watch me and try to learn from me and I help them," said Suriano, The Record Male Athlete of the Week. "Kids will come up to me and ask me, 'Hey, what do you do when this happens?' Or, 'Can you help me with this?' Or I'll watch them and they'll do something I think I can help them improve upon.

"It's not that I'm a master of the sport. I'm just trying to help out, trying to give a helping hand."

The rest of the Crusaders probably were watching closely as Suriano rolled to his third Beast of the East title Dec. 21. He beat Jake Newhouse of Perry High School in Massillon, Ohio, 8-1, in the 120-pound final.

In the tournament – which always is stocked with some of the best wrestlers in the country - Suriano registered three pins. The six points he gave up came on escapes. His win in the second-to-last title bout helped Bergen Catholic push ahead of Phillipsburg and finish fourth overall in the team standings - and first among New Jersey teams other than perennial powerhouse Blair Academy.

Suriano, who beat Sean Conoly by technical fall, 17-1 (3:50), in a dual meet against Hanover Park on Saturday, says his drive to succeed permeates all areas of his life, whether he's on the mat or playing FIFA World Cup on PlayStation with friends.

He's confident his ability to work just a little harder than the next guy will make him a successful businessman someday. He's considering studying business at whichever school he attends, and he always can get some pointers from his dad, Robert, who runs his own pest control business.

"It's all about dedicating and sacrificing," Suriano said. "... Other people are partying and going out, and I'm training."

Also nominated: Tyler Pepe of Passaic Valley and Jonathan Tropea of St. Joseph for wrestling.
